

ANGOLA

The Republic of Angola is a country in Southern Africa. It is the seventh-largest country in Africa, and is bordered by Namibia to the south, the Democratic Republic of the Congo to the north, Zambia to the east, and the Atlantic Ocean to west. Angola is a huge country and the climate in the north is much more tropical than in the arid south. The indigenous languages with the largest usage are Umbundu, Kimbundu and Kikongo. Portuguese is the official languages of the country & Angolan kwanza is used as a means of currency.

Angola's largest national park, Iona National Park, bordering the Atlantic ocean with gorgeous desert dunes, plenty of bird life and slowly recovering its larger mammals after some serious poaching during the war. One of Africa's most beautiful natural wonders, the Ruacana Falls, is located in Angola. With an Atlantic coastline stretching for over 1,650 kms, mighty rivers flow into wide estuaries depositing sediments they have brought with them from the high plateaus to form numerous small inlands, bays and sandbanks and where excellent beaches can be found.

When the discussion is about oil and diamonds, the country of Angola naturally gets mentioned. With the richness of its natural resources, locals have forgotten that warfare prevented economic stability ever since the 1970s. Visitors are rather scarce in their part of Central Africa, but it cannot be denied that the place is dotted with cultural richness and untouched geographic destinations. Through the years, the country's security has been improved, and along with it, infrastructure advancements were made. Despite the introduction to metal structures, Angola remains to be an attractive place for travelers who have a knack for adventure and solitude.
